

Discover, Discovery

A person discovers that we are spirit and exist separate from the body in another, an eternal dimension.

As children, many of us were exposed to all sorts of doctrines about God without anybody ever encouraging us to discover God first-hand within ourselves.

Brilliant minds, some of the world's leading scientists and artists, engaged in discovering these drugs and applying them to a whole range of things.

Discovery of one's divine nature can lead to a way of being, on both an individual and a collective scale that is incomparably superior to what is ordinarily considered the norm.

Each level of energy which man has discovered outside exists within his body and is available to conscious discrimination.

Each man is Buddha. The aim of life is to discover your Buddha-hood. You must retrace the ancient path yourself. Discover your own Christ-hood.

Eastern philosophical theories of 4000 years ago adapt to recent scientific discoveries of nuclear physics, biochemistry, genetics and astronomy.

Every person is born divine and the purpose of life is to rediscover your forgotten divinity.

If we are ever to discover how we can best cooperate with the psyche, we have to allow it to reveal its true nature to us.

In one sense, psychedelics are enzymes that make the creative process and the process of discovery go faster.

In this state, all the sensory pathways are wide open and there is an increased sensitivity and enjoyment of the perceptual nuances discovered in the external world.

Insights are accompanied by an emotion which reinforces the conviction that a fragment of Truth has been discovered. We call this kind of learning "revelation."

Intuition is the part of you that has hunches and is able to discover direct knowledge or understanding without rational thought.

Journalists in general understood Leary about as well as one who might write that Einstein discovered $e=$ something-or-other.

Just as instruments of external discovery have revolutionized society, so will the instruments of inner discovery.

Mankind needs to discover a new culture or humanity. (What we have is a culture of inhumanity.)

Many LSD subjects discover in their sessions new dimensions in music and new ways of listening to it.

Most people discover a deep connection with an inner source, higher self, or God, and they might experience the world as an expression of the Divine.

Most people feel exalted as they discover their real cosmic status and gain an entirely new perspective on their daily problems.

One can discover an all-encompassing sense of unity and interconnectedness with all of creation.

One must have a genuine curiosity about new direction of personal growth and the fabric of psychedelic insight and discovery. There should be dedication of purpose.

Religious ecstasy was not discovered by the drug cults. It has been known for centuries. (Make that millennia, not just centuries.)

Spiritual development is a movement toward wholeness, the discovery of one's true potential.

Subjects often discovered sensitivities and capacities within themselves that they never would have suspected.

The avatar, the divine one is he who discovers and lives out this rhythm during his earthly trip.

The birth of any new culture from the ruins of the old will depend on the discovery of some principle of unity.

The discoveries that lie on the horizon are unimaginably transformative for human society.

The discovery of LSD and subsequent psychedelic research opened up new revolutionary avenues in the study of human consciousness.

The discovery of LSD is as important to philosophy and religion as the discovery of the microscope was to biology.

The discovery of mind-expanding, mind-blowing, mind-bending and mind-transcending properties of drugs seems to go back to the New Stone Age, if not earlier.

The emotional impact of sound can be modified. Not infrequently, LSD subjects discover dimensions in music that they were unable to perceive before.

The essence of metaphysical realization is the discovery that the conscious Self, the ultimate knower in man, is substantially identical with the infinite.

The healthy mystical core that inspired and nourished all great spiritual systems is now being rediscovered and reformulated in modern scientific terms.

The individual discovers new ways of enjoying his or her own physiological processes and develops more respect for life in all its infinite manifestations.

The most vital human need is to discover one's own inner reality. This makes it possible to draw on the enormous resources and wisdom of ages that lie in the collective psyche.

The mystical world-view is surprisingly compatible with revolutionary discoveries in modern science, such as relativity theory and quantum physics.

The rediscovery of these experiences and the recognition of their heuristic relevance has been one of the major incentives for the development of a new movement in psychology.

The religious experience is the ecstatic certain discovery of answers to spiritual questions.

The ultimate challenge to Newtonian science has been the discovery that clinically blind people experiencing out of body experiences describe scenes that are visually accurate.

The use of LSD led to a resurrection of the body. The person discovered that his body belonged not to the state, the moralist or the doctor but to himself.

The ways of liberation propose that what many, perhaps, discover in death may also be discovered in the midst of life.

There was a time when the Jews exalted a man and made him divine and then nailed him up when they discovered he was human after all.

These New Worlds of a subconscious can never be colonized, are seldom thoroughly explored and in many cases await discovery.

We discover abruptly that we have been programmed all these years, that everything we accept as reality is just social fabrication.

We discover that there is some superior order harmonizing what seems to be conflicts at the level of our normal individual consciousness.

We discovered the long-sought after philosopher's stone, the key to increased intelligence.

We have become aware of the undiscovered universe within, of the uncharted regions of consciousness.

We may be on the brink of rediscovering what was common knowledge among the ancient Greeks.

We must discover new mental energy sources for overcoming our society's psychological inertia and anachronistic state of mind.

When one turns his attention inward, he discovers a world of 'inner space' which is as vast and as real as the external, physical world.

When the ego is dispelled, there is insight, the perception of a whole new pattern of relationships comparable to scientific or artistic discovery.

With LSD, we had found the means with which our Western kind of civilization could be renewed by the discovery of new mysteries.

You will discover the key to enhanced intelligence within the chemistry of the nervous system.

A visionary will recognize the possibility of discovering from mind, in some of its extraordinary awakened states, a truth, or a collection of truths, which do not become manifest in his every-day condition.

After they had discovered and experienced feelings of cosmic unity in their sessions, they realized that the state they had really been craving for was transcendence and not drug intoxication. (Drug intoxication means narcotics and alcohol, not psychedelics.)

Albert Einstein discovered the basic principles of his special theory of relativity in an unusual state of mind; according to his description, most of the insights came to him in the form of kinaesthetic sensations.

An enormous amount of energy from every fiber of your body is released under LSD, most especially including sexual energy. There is no question that LSD is the most powerful aphrodisiac ever discovered by man.

Art and religion, philosophy and science, morals and politics—these are the instruments by means of which men have tried to discover a coherence in the flux of events, to impose an order on the chaos of experience.

Because of their clarity and vividness, transcendent states frequently feel more real than “ordinary” reality; people often compare the discovery of these realms to awakening from a dream, removing opaque veils, or opening the doors of perception.

Dependence on a narrow conceptual framework can prevent scientists from discovering, recognizing or even imagining undreamed-of possibilities in the realm of natural phenomena.

Expecting scientific descriptions to discover the pattern to which nature conforms is really assuming that law or verbal formulations precedes physical behavior. (Nature was around long before man and his word games.)

For most people, this discovery is a glorious surprise. Mystics come back raving about the higher levels of perception where one sees realities a hundred times more beautiful and meaningful than the familiar scripts of normal life.

For the perception of art, particularly music, it is not infrequent that as a result of psychedelic experiences, nonmusical persons develop vivid interest in music and others discover entirely new ways of experiencing it.

He is, as it were, embarked upon a voyage of discovery which is only completed by his return to the normal world, to which he comes back with insights different from those of the inhabitants.

If we can even start to move in the direction of relying on intuition and experience to discover the positive potential of drugs, the drug problem will automatically begin to recede. (The fight against drugs is what creates, causes or is the “drug problem”.)

If you get with yourself, get with gravity, get with energy, following its line of least resistance, you will discover that all the vibrations of nature are ecstatic, erotic or blissful. Existence is orgasm.

In Nature, there is yet undiscovered glory, a spirit which gradually will interpenetrate you as you commune with her. She is not a mockery, a sham, for a truthful essence indwells, informs her.

In some circles of serious research into the drug's effect, it is thought that LSD is possibly the clue that will lead to the discovery and disclosure of man's unconscious, its meaning and function.

Man is just beginning to catch on to the idea, just beginning to discover that there is an infinity of meaning and complex power in the equipment he carries around behind his eyebrows.

Most people, it seems, who relax and "let go" have the universal experience of discovering a single Reality, a oneness with all things, an identity with God, with the Supreme Being, with the Higher Self, or whatever you wish to call it.

Our culture teaches you that you're nothing but shit in a lot of ways, both obvious and subtle. You have to discover for yourself that you're better than that. The Psychedelic can actually help teach this lesson, but it requires guidance and preparation.

Sometimes the "doors of perception" are cleansed suddenly with a jolt; sometimes the cleansing comes gradually with ever increasing discoveries. These discoveries may be psychological insights or may be made through any of the senses.

Subjects who had previously ridiculed alchemy and the ancient forms of divinization suddenly discovered their deeper meaning and found genuine appreciation of their metaphysical relevance.

The discovery of the hidden aspects of reality and of the challenges associated with them adds fascinating new dimensions to existence. It makes one's life much richer and more interesting.

The impressive mosaic of new observations and theories that are already available suggest that in the future the old/new discoveries in regard to consciousness and the human psyche might become integral parts of a comprehensive scientific worldview.

The past is not something fixed and unutterable. Its facts are rediscovered by every succeeding generation, its values reassessed, its meanings redefined in the context of present tastes and preoccupations. (We need to rediscover a lot more.)

The spirituality revealed in the process of focused self-exploration sees God as the Divine Within. Here the individual uses various techniques that mediate direct experiential access to transpersonal realities and discovers his or her own divinity.

The voyager may see his companion at different ages of life, at different periods of history, and as different persons. At one time or another, during the psychedelic session, the voyager looks at his companion. Often it is an overwhelming discovery.

the Western discovery of the creative power of "no-thought" and contemplation without strained attention. Such a mode of awareness is essential when research is expected to bring forth new concepts.

The young men of this land, as they are often called, a "lost" race—they are a race that never yet has been discovered. And the whole secret, power and knowledge of their own discovery is locked within them.

These drugs promise discoveries about mind as important and far reaching in their ultimate effects as have been the revolutionary findings of this century concerning the physical universe.

This universal tradition of the eternal moment always carries the implication that there is some very special and splendid insight to be discovered in a kind of concentration upon the immediate moment.

We are dealing with a human phenomenon, the kind of phenomenon which cannot be disregarded by anyone who is trying to discover what religion is and what are the deep needs which it must satisfy.

We were getting turned on in so many ways, lit up to new experiences, discoveries, adventures, music, all of which had something very tangibly related to the drugs available.

When he discovers what an ample store of unhastened attention he can give to all the rich content brought to him by eye and ear, he finds it hard not to believe that somehow time has been stretched.

Adventurous painters and musicians discovered that LSD was a catalyst, an impetus to startling new rearrangements of vision, to a bubbling, ecstatic, seemingly inexhaustible pool of images and ideas, to a new-old kind of harmony between the artist and the medium.

experiences of other universes—The strange and alien worlds that LSD subjects discover and explore in this type of experience seem to have a reality of their own, although not within the range of our cosmos; they appear to exist in other dimensions, in universes coexistent with ours. (eyes closed)

In our minds we possess a far greater wealth than we have ever conceived. Such a discovery may do much for us in every way, making material ends seem less valuable to us as ultimate aims, and encouraging us to live well for the sake of a spirit which possesses fathomless capacities for happiness no less than knowledge.

Subjects were advised to “turn off” their analytic faculties, to relax and accept whatever form of experience came their way, to refrain from attempting to control the sequence or nature of the events. The declared aim was to stop using one’s cognitive and perceptual processes in the familiar way and to heighten the likelihood of discovering new ways.

The best researchers, when confronting problems and riddles that had defied all solution by ordinary methods did employ their minds in an unusual way, did put themselves into a state of egoless “creativity” which permitted them to have insights so remarkable that by means of these they were able to make their greatest and most original discoveries.

The discoveries of the last few decades strongly suggest that the psyche is not limited to the Freudian individual unconscious and confirm the perennial truth, found in many mystical traditions, that human beings might be commensurate with all there is.

Transpersonal experiences and their extraordinary potential certainly attests to this fact.

The everyday clinical practice of LSD psychotherapy brings repeated evidence of the powerful healing potential of the death-rebirth process. The discovery of this potent therapeutic mechanism, as yet unrecognized and unacknowledged by Western science, represents one of the most surprising findings of my LSD research.

The theoretical formulations and practical principles that LSD psychotherapy has discovered or validated include a new expanded cartography of the human mind, new and effective therapeutic mechanisms, a new strategy of psychotherapy and a synthesis of spirituality and science.

We remain ignorant of our true nature—our eternal Self. It was that Self that I longed to discover. In order to get in touch with the ground of my being, I had to strip away the accretions of prejudices and preconceptions that cluttered up my psyche, making it impossible to see what was really there.

What we're doing for the mind is what the microbiologists did for the external sciences 300 years ago when they discovered the microscope and they made this incredible discovery that life, health, growth, every form of organic life, is based on the cell, which is invisible. (That was Timothy Leary.)

A new and exciting area was discovered for psychedelic psychotherapy: the care of patients with terminal cancer and some other incurable diseases. Studies of dying individuals indicated that this approach was able to bring not only alleviation of the emotional suffering and relief from severe physical pain associated with cancer, but also dramatically transform the concept of death and change the attitude toward dying.

A person in the psychedelic state can perceive much more in other human beings than he can when he is in his everyday mind. The voyager may see his companion at different ages of life, at different periods of history, and as different persons. At one time or another, during the psychedelic session, the voyager looks at his companion. Often it is an overwhelming discovery.

I pronounced that LSD was the greatest discovery man had ever made. It has such enormous potential because the mind is infinite. LSD opens up the resources of the mind. Since the mind is the most important aspect of the human being, what could possibly be more important than a drug that revealed the awesome, infinite potential that lies within? (That was Timothy Leary.)

LSD is a unique and powerful tool for the exploration of the human mind and human nature. Psychedelic experiences mediate access to deep realms of the psyche that have not yet been discovered and acknowledged by mainstream psychology and psychiatry. They also reveal new possibilities and mechanisms of therapeutic change and personality transformation.

Once people have experienced the spiritual dimensions growing in their lives, they often learn that their lives without it were futile and impoverished. Previously, they may have managed adequately but unhappily, unaware of the seemingly endless realms that have since enormously enriched their existence. They discover that spirituality is a necessary element that enhances their lives and sense of well-being.

That famous "revival of religion," about which so many people have been talking for so long, will not come about as a result of evangelistic mass meetings or the television appearances of photogenic clergymen. It will come about as a result of biochemical discoveries that will make it possible for large numbers of men and women to achieve a radical self-transcendence and a deeper understanding of the nature of things.

The discovery of brain-change drugs has been compared to the discovery of the microscope. New forms swim into perception. It's a truism that you cannot impose the ethics and language of the past upon the subject matter revealed by a new extension of the senses. Galileo was arrested for describing what he saw in his telescope. The inquisition would not bother to look through the lens.

The individual tuned into this experiential area usually discovers within himself or herself genuinely positive values, such as a sense of justice, appreciation of beauty, feelings of love and self-respect as well as respect for others. These values, as well as the motivations to pursue them and live in accordance with them, appear on this level to be intrinsic to human nature.

The opportunity to vividly experience specific memories from different periods of one's life makes it possible to see their interrelations and discover chains of unconscious neurotic patterns underlying specific emotional problems. This can be an important transforming experience that results in profound changes in the personality structure, emotional dynamics, and behavior of the individual.

There had been previous explorations. There was a history, a tradition. There were maps and guidebooks. Though trained in the Western methods of scientific research, Leary (and the rest of us) felt affirmed in our spiritual approach to psychedelic experiences by the discovery of these ancient writings. Our initial work on this text was later developed and published as The Psychedelic Experience. (That was Ralph Metzner.).

Those who were previously convinced that death was the ultimate defeat and meant the end of any form of existence discovered various alternatives to this materialistic and pragmatic point of view. They came to realize how little conclusive evidence there is for any authoritative opinion in this matter and often began seeing death and dying as a cosmic voyage into the unknown.

Three hundred years ago, if I announced there was a level of reality made up of tiny particles which seem to have a beauty, a meaning, a planfulness of their own, I'd be in danger of being imprisoned. When I could persuade people to look through the microscope lens at a leaf, or a snowflake or a drop of blood, then they would discover that beyond the macroscopic world are visible realms of energy and meaning.

We use all sorts of drugs to ease our minds but none to reveal our minds. We seem to want change, but not understanding. Most of us have never heard of psychedelic drugs, and those who have would never think of using one themselves. Although man has used drugs in religious rites to discover his relationship with God since the dawn of history, the Judeo-Christian mind cannot accept such practices.

Discover and nurture your own divinity.

Discover your atomic, cellular, somatic, sensory divinity.

Each experience opens up new worlds of discovery.

Each moment can be a joyful discovery.

Ego discovers that ego is a fraudulent actor in a fake show.

Enlightenment is the discovery of our own true nature.

For many, the discoveries mean new truth and wisdom.
Godmanhood is to be discovered here and now inwardly, not in the letter of the Bible.
He discovers that he is not only himself but also God or that he is the whole universe.
He or she discovers what real real peace of mind feels like.
Holy humor is the discovery of the ultimate joke on oneself.
Individuals tend to discover meaning and beauty in ordinary objects.
LSD helps you find divinity and helps you discover yourself, discover God and meaning.
Man wakes up from his egotistical daydream and discovers himself.
Stolaroff said that LSD was the greatest discovery that man had ever made.
The discovery of LSD might rank with the Copernican revolution.
The laws of nature are not discovered but invented.
The LSD ecstasy is the joyful discovery that ego is only a fraction of my identity.
The mind discovers its natural and unconfused state.
The vast reaches of these undiscovered wilds are awesome.
This discovery will be the birth hour of the cosmic history of the human species.
To discover your soul, withdraw your thoughts from outward and material things.
We can discover that the divine impulse is everywhere.
We discover our true self to be the Self of the universe.
We discover that there is a real liberation that is possible for every human being.
We have to rediscover God from within.
When we discovered euphoria—rediscovered euphoria—I thought it was here to stay.
You are God, but only you can discover and nurture your divinity.
You discover a new meaning.
You may discover that you are living a robot existence, devoid of meaning.

A painter discovered the identity of the image which had been eluding him for his paintings. (This was under LSD, of course.)

After experiencing LSD, he went to be with his wife and found “It was like discovering her all over again. Her body suddenly became new and fresh and exciting.”

Experiencing these emotions in all their intensity was both a way for me to discover that I was capable of God feelings and for me to realize that they lay deep within me.

I discovered emotionally that the essence of reality is self-awareness, selfhood, not egoism.

I looked down at the leaves and discovered a cavernous intricacy, pulsing with undecipherable mystery.

I was now discovering dimensions of the cosmos that are usually hidden to our senses and intellects.

My experience was so deep, so moving, so meaningful. What I really discovered under LSD is love. Some call it God.

My gratitude for the moment when the veil parted and I knew that “I” am so much more than I thought was so immense that I often discovered myself sobbing with joy.

The subject discovered the rubber stamp artificial structure of social reality and social role.

Through the richness of her experience, she discovered that the dimensions of her being were greater than she thought.

I realized that it was not up to us to dictate what the human psyche should be like in order to fit our scientific beliefs and worldview. Rather, it is important to discover and accept the true nature of the psyche and find out how we can best cooperate with it.

I spent a long time watching the play of life around me, listening to the gossip of trees, insects and animals, discovering that there is one biological intelligence that expresses herself through the various living forms.

They discovered within themselves that universal river of ecstasy from which flowed the energy, power and refreshment to revive religious bodies tired out by too much intellectualism, moralism and institutionalism.

I gave way to delight, as mystics have for centuries when they peeked through the curtains and discovered that this world, so manifestly real, was actually a tiny stage set constructed by the mind. There was a sea of possibilities out there (in there?), other realities, an infinite array of programs for other futures.

I now felt I had had some direct experience of the ineffable realms of union with God, and I discovered that my dissatisfaction with conventional religion was not due to the death of God, as some theologians proclaimed, but rather to the impoverished concepts of God, currently in vogue.

All at once, everything appeared in an uncommonly clear light. Was this something I had simply failed to notice before? Was I suddenly discovering the spring forest as it actually looked? It shone with the most beautiful radiance, speaking to the heart, as though it wanted to encompass me in its majesty. I was filled with an indescribable sensation of joy, oneness, and blissful security.

The night was all joyous discoveries, many of which brought me almost to the point of tears, to laughter and astonished wows regularly. Whole new horizons. I felt humbled and honored to be in a room with and listening to such enlightened powers. I felt in flash after flash that I'd never been so high before, never so aware and never—at least not since a long, long half-remembered time ago—so hopeful and happy.

Everything in this universe seemed to be conscious. After having had to accept the possibility of fetal consciousness, I was confronted with an even more startling discovery: consciousness might actually pervade all existence. My scientific mind was heavily tested by this possibility until I realized that although many of these experiences were incompatible with our common sense, they were not necessarily out of the realm of science.

I discovered within myself a complex inner world, rich in sensibility, symbol, feeling, and metaphor, not only for accessible recollections of my life and those more deeply stored in my unconscious, but also for those that transcended my own direct experience. It was as if the events of my life the lives of my forebears and unknown people from earlier periods of history and diverse cultures were passing through me. I was both actor and audience in this drama.

Composers given the drug discovered that they had greater insight into music.

I began to discover new possibilities within myself.

I discovered trees.

I felt that I had made a great discovery or as if another personality had been born.

I had a sense of discovery, creative excitement and intense, at times mystical inspiration.

I had a vivid spiritual self that had been there all the time, waiting for me to discover it.

I moved into an undiscovered country.

I went for a walk and literally discovered the world.

I'd rediscovered the sort of Nutcracker Suite universe of the four year old.

People discovered the key to where it was all at.

They discovered that good can be even better (and it doesn't get any better than LSD).

a state of egoless "creativity" which permitted them to have insights so remarkable that by means of these they were able to make their greatest and most original discoveries an atmosphere of psychological freedom; of permissiveness to think, to feel, to be whatever is discovered within oneself at last discovers that he can't control his mind at all and "lets his mind think whatever it likes" discover that eating can be an adventure involving qualities and dimensions they had never imagined discover that the entire string of evolution on this planet is writ in protein molecules inside the nucleus of every cell in your body discovers a world of sublimely beautiful landscapes, of living architecture and of heroic figures (eyes closed) discovery of one's true identity and of the dimensions of one's being that connect the individual with the entire cosmos and are commensurate with all of existence discovery of the world within, a world infinitely more complex and rich than the artificial structures of the outer world

Einstein's discovery that there is no "time" or "space" that a physicist can measure, but only a "space-time" event which is the unit of modern physics in closest touch with that point of experience where reality can alone be discovered: this moment. Here, life is alive.

intensification of color and sound, euphoria, sense of having discovered some great wisdom introduced to unfathomable realms within, new awarenesses and undiscovered possibilities

LSD a kind of telescope to scan the deep-space regions of the spirit and discover a greater understanding of his religious instinct

LSD one of the most important scientific discoveries of our time, the significance of which has yet to dawn on modern man

many mechanisms of therapeutic change that are entirely new and have not yet been discovered and acknowledged by traditional psychiatry self-knowledge or self-awakening—the discovery of who or what I am when I'm no longer identified with any role or conventional definition of the person state of consciousness in which the individual discovers himself to be one continuous process with God that self-discovery could be pleasant, that philosophy was fun, that science could be a pagan love of life, that revelation was joyful, the positive spirit of the 1960's the astounding discovery that consciousness can tune into an infinite number of organic levels the discovery of archetypal and mythological realms or entities that seem to have existences of their own (eyes closed) the discovery of the existence of shades of inner meaning one would not normally credit with the capacity for signifying so much the discovery that both the voluntary and involuntary aspects of the mind are alike spontaneous

the discovery that the human brain possesses an infinity of potentialities and can operate at unexpected space-time dimensions

the laughter at oneself and with one's Self, upon discovering play instead of battle behind the contest of Heaven and Hell

the moment of awakening, when the voyager discovers the wonder and awe of the divine life process the rediscovery within ourselves of a virgin not-mind capable of non-verbally, not-thinking in response to immediate experience the spiritual dimension, will discover the critical importance of the basic ontological and cosmological questions to discover the kind of communion which the world and the soul are holding together, and the manner in which they hold it to experience the infinite joy of rediscovering the original and blissful state of Universal Consciousness to explore the infinity of inner space, to discover the terror and adventure and ecstasy that lie within us all (The ego is what has terror.)

to work through emotional, creative or intellectual blockages and further the process of self-discovery

the art of abandoning all conceptions of how one should feel in order to discover how one actually does feel—to get down to pure experience, free from all prejudices and preconceptions of what it is “supposed” to be the discovery of freedom and truth (In the “free” united States, most people don't know or even have much concept of what freedom and truth are or the meaning of those words.)

a continuous journey of discovery

a journey of self-discovery a journey of spiritual discovery a life-changing joyous discovery a period of profound elation as a result of my discoveries a truly important discovery, the significance of which has yet to be fully understood a voyage of discovery
a wild voyage of discovery an exciting adventure, filled with discovery and new learning an exciting ongoing adventure, filled with discovery and new learning at last discovers that he can't control his mind at all awed by her discovery can discover a deep mystical meaning discover a new spiritual life discover a world of visionary beauty discover a world of visionary beauty, the enormous heightening of the perception of color discover beauty and wisdom and God discover true meaning of our existence discovered a new unexpected source of strength and their true identity discovered and experienced feelings of cosmic unity discovered final truths discovered how to free the mind of humanity from culturally conditioned limitations discovered infinite realities within the brain discovered that "I" exist independent of social ego discovered the truth discovered their immortality and eternal life discovering a strange new world of extraordinary radiance and significance discovering entirely new ways of listening to music discovering levels of consciousness discovering new dimensions and possibilities within themselves discovering the joyous delights of direct sensuality discovering the truth about processes of deep consciousness discovering "truth"
discovering unsuspected dimensions of life discovering where his true genius lies discovers a different way of experiencing the world discovers an inner world "infinite and holy discovery of how consciousness can grow discovery of love and discovery of the true self discovery of our secret life within, explore spiritual individuality discovery of the mind's unity discovery of the spiritual dimensions of existence exciting new discoveries inner journeys and discoveries in the unknown territories of the human psyche internal exploration, ecstatic discovery listening to music, discovering entirely new dimensions in pieces that he knew quite well LSD the most potent aphrodisiac yet discovered mystical discoveries

new spiritual discovery opened the door to the discovery of myself
our discovery of eternity paradise rediscovered people who used psychedelic mushrooms for personal growth and spiritual discovery philosophic exultation accompanying new cortical discoveries spiritual discovery
the adventure of self-discovery
the awesome implications of what brain research may discover the discovery of energies within, which men call "divine" the discovery of light in the very depth of darkness the discovery of new phases of mental life the discovery of one's divinity the discovery that the human brain possesses an infinity of potentialities the discovery of the mystery, the wonder beyond all wonders the discovery of the New World, a visit to the celestial spheres the discovery of the vibratory nature of the universe the discovery of this ancient and universal experience the discovery of this apparently ancient and universal experience the discovery of your divinity
the discovery or re-discovery of God the discovery that he is more than ego
the discovery that nothing is really dead the earth-shaking discovery which revolutionizes human thought and life the ecstasy of a discoverer
the most valuable chemical discovery of the century the nourishing and inspirational dimensions they have discovered the psychedelic road to discovery
the rediscovery of the "inner" world the Self discovered by the mystic in visionary raptures the sense of awestruck discovery psychedelic artists tried to communicate the social, philosophical and religious implications in the discoveries made the voyage of discovery, a spiritual journey their discovery of their Higher Self these rediscovered ancient sacraments thirst for insight, adventure, strange surprises and mystical discoveries this extraordinary experience of self-discovery under LSD this 20th century voyage of spiritual discovery this voyage of discovery, a spiritual journey to discover a basic pattern of the universal process to discover and cultivate the divinity within each person to discover intuitively to discover the hidden truth and mystery of being to discover the meaning which underlies the words to discover the inner potential to discover the Ultimate Unity to explore the unknown, to feel no limit as to what might be discovered to find the divine and to discover the self to rediscover the universe as distinct from a mere multiverse turning our attention away from external conformity to inner potential and self-discovery voyages of self-discovery was like uncovering a secret revelation or discovering the Holy Grail wonders all of us can discover for ourselves